

Herman Miller and Geiger Recognized with Forest Stewardship Council® Leadership Award

Herman Miller (NASDAQ: MLHR) and Geiger earned the Forest Stewardship Council (FSC®) Leadership Award for their longstanding commitment to manufacturing with wood sourced from responsibly managed forests. Both manufacturers are among a select group of businesses dedicated to reducing environmental impacts by protecting against deforestation and forest degradation.

The FSC Leadership Award selection committee unanimously agreed that Herman Miller and Geiger's commitment to responsible forest management makes them a true leader.

The majority of Herman Miller and Geiger's wood consumption is in their systems products, including laminate and veneer casegoods, worksurfaces, and tables.

By having an FSC management system and making more FSC certified (FSC® C121106) products available, Herman Miller and Geiger are taking action to reduce and remove deforestation and forest degradation from their operations and supply chains.

"It's never been more important to address deforestation and carbon emissions. We continue to partner with organizations who share our commitment to being a good steward of the environment," said Gabe Wing, Herman Miller's Director of Sustainability. "By championing responsible forestry practices, we are helping customers and suppliers address these global issues."

This is Herman Miller's second recognition and Geiger's first. Herman Miller was last recognized in 2015. Herman Miller began its association with the Forest Stewardship Council in 2007. Geiger began in 2009.
