

Maharam at 2022 Chicago Design Days

This June, Maharam will preview over twenty new textiles at its Chicago showroom to coincide with MillerKnoll Design Days. The presentation will feature upcoming offerings from the Maharam Design Studio, Paul Smith, Scholten & Baijings, and Maharam's newest collaborator, the Dutch designer Bertjan Pot, whose first collection of woven rugs and textiles with Maharam will launch in November.

Maharam's Chicago space, located on the fifth floor of Herman Miller's flagship in Fulton Market, was designed in 2021 by architect Neil Logan who has collaborated with Maharam on showroom, exhibition, and office design for the past twenty years. Using a material vocabulary of light wood and metal, Logan and Maharam have established a clean, minimalist language that creates versatile gallery-like spaces designed to present textiles to their best advantage.

The new textiles will be presented on Logan's architectural installation Frame Structures, an understated basswood framework over which textiles can be hung, layered, and arranged. In contrast to traditional flat presentations, Frame Structures grants the textiles sculptural form and dimensionality that suggests their many potential applications.

A series of six freestanding Frame Structures—each measuring at just over six feet tall—are syncopated through the center of the showroom. Frame Structures' three-dimensional gridded composition allows textiles to be hung at different heights, creating a loose, staccato rhythm and a close vantage to the textiles—an inviting tone that is affirmed by the installation's material warmth and human scale.
